Abstract Thin films of blend polymer electrolytes comprising poly(vinyl alcohol) (PVA) and poly(vinyl pyrrolidone) (PVP) complexed with ammonium thiocyanate (NH_4SCN) salt in different compositions have been prepared by solution casting technique using distilled water as solvent. The prepared films have been investigated by different experimental techniques. The complexation of these films has been studied by FTIR spectroscopy. The increase in amorphousness of the films with increase in NH_4SCN content has been confirmed by XRD analysis. The addition of ammonium thiocyanate salt to PVA-PVP polymer blend shows a shift in T_g of the blend. The effect of salt concentration and temperature on the ionic conductivity of the polymer blend films has been analyzed using AC impedance spectroscopy. The maximum conductivity of $6.85 \times 10^{-4} \text{ S cm}^{-1}$ at room temperature has been observed for the blend with 50 mol% PVA-50 mol% PVP complexed with 40 mol% NH_4SCN . The activation energy has been found to be minimum (0.24 eV) for this sample. Wagner's polarization technique shows that the charge transport in these blend films is predominantly due to ions. Using the highest conductivity blend polymer electrolyte, a proton battery has been fabricated and its discharge characteristics have been studied.

Introduction

The amorphous polymeric materials especially proton-conducting polymer electrolytes play a vital role in the ionic devices such as fuel cells, supercapacitors, batteries, and electrochemical devices because of their high conductivity, thermal stability, life time, and mechanical strength properties [1–3]. Nafion is a standard proton conducting membrane used in fuel cells [4]. The researchers are now developing a new polymer membrane to replace Nafion because of its high cost. For developing a new proton-conducting polymer electrolytes, high ambient temperature conductivity, flexibility, durability, and mechanical strength are considered as important factors. Various efforts such as adding plasticizers and inorganic inert fillers to polymer electrolytes, use of copolymers, and blending two polymers [5–10] have been made to enhance the electrical, mechanical, and electrochemical properties of polymer electrolytes. Among the various approaches that have been employed for the preparation of polymer electrolytes with high ionic conductivity and appreciable thermal stability at ambient temperature, blending of polymers is an important method. Polymer blends are polymer systems originated from the physical mixture of two or more polymers and/or copolymers, without a high degree of chemical reactions between them. The advantages of polymer blends lie in the ability to combine existing polymers into new compositions obtaining in this way, materials with specific properties for desired applications. This strategy allows for savings in research and development of new materials with equivalent properties, as well as versatility, simplicity, relatively low cost and faster development time of new materials [11]. Abstract. Polymer electrolytes with proton conductivity based on blend polymer using polyvinyl alcohol (PVA) and poly acrylo nitrile (PAN) doped with ammonium thiocyanate have been prepared by solution casting method using DMF as solvent. The complex formation between the blend polymer and the salt has been confirmed by FTIR Spectroscopy. The amorphous nature of the blend polymer electrolytes have been confirmed by XRD analysis. The highest conductivity at 303 K has been found to be $3.25 \times 10^{-3} \text{ S cm}^{-1}$ for 20 mol % NH_4SCN doped 92.5PVA:7.5PAN system. The increase in conductivity of the doped blend polymer electrolytes with increasing temperature suggests the Arrhenius type thermally activated process. The activation energy is found to be low (0.066 eV) for the highest conductivity sample.

INTRODUCTION

In the field of electrochromic energy devices such as batteries, fuel cells etc., proton conducting polymer electrolytes play a essential role because of its mechanical and electrical properties [1]. Various methods have been adopted to improve the electrical, mechanical and electrochemical properties of polymer electrolytes. Among the various methods, Polymer blending is the most promising way to improve these properties which is a mixture of structurally different polymers. There are many reports available based on PVA-PVP [2], P[VdF-HEP]-PVAc[3], PVAc-PMMA[4], PVdF-PMMA[5] and so on. PVA is a semi crystalline polymer containing hydroxyl group attached to methane carbons which can be a source of hydrogen bonding. PAN is a synthetic, semi crystalline organic polymer resin which is a common substitute for wool in clothing and home furnishings. It is already reported that the molecular weight of 92.5%PVA: 7.5% PAN exhibits the conductivity of $1.13 \times 10^{-7} \text{ S cm}^{-1}$ at room temperature [6]. In this work, proton conducting polymer blend electrolyte based on PVA-PAN doped with ammonium thiocyanate (NH_4SCN) is synthesized and characterized. Ammonium salts have already been reported as a good proton donors to the polymer matrix [7].

EXPERIMENTAL TECHNIQUE

Blend polymer electrolytes are prepared with optimized compositions of 92.5% PVA(MW 1,25,000): 7.5 % PAN (MW 1,40,000) and various compositions of ammonium thiocyanate using dimethyl formamide (DMF) as solvent by solution casting technique. 92.5% weight of PVA is stirred in DMF at 60°C for 3 hours and after its complete dissolution, 7.5 % weight of PAN is added and stirred for 2 hours after which the ammonium salt is added. The mixture is stirred till it becomes homogeneous. Then it is poured in the petri dish and evaporated at 60°C in vacuum oven. Free standing film is obtained after 48 hours. Films obtained with 5 mol%, 10mol %, 15 mol%, 20mol% and 25mol % by weight of ammonium thiocyanate. Then the film is carefully removed from the petridish and sealed in an airtight cover. Then the prepared films were subjected to Fourier transform infrared spectroscopy (FTIR) using SHIMADZU-IR Affinity-1 spectrophotometer. The XRD patterns were recorded at room temperature using a XPERT-PRO Diffractometer with Cuku radiation at 40 KV and 30 mA in the 2 θ range of 10°-80°. The electrical properties of the films were
